

Windsor Castle in a Consumption, or the Little Man's Mistake.

No. 1. Mr. T—d—y. “ I WOULD rather been buried in the ruins, than thus treated.”

2. Mr. R—s. “ I have orders to drive you out of the Castle, as the Board in general are of opinion that you will make a better Surveyor at sea than upon land.”

3. Mr. R—s the Younger. “ Split his thick scull father.”

4. Mr. C—p—d, Labourer in trust. “ If Mr. T—d—y would have suffered me to have spoke to him I would have instructed him better, but he deemed my advice and judgment good for nothing after 30 years experience.”

5. Mr. Em—b—n. “ Notwithstanding I was confident that if the T—s was taken away, and the drains stopped, the Castle would give way, yet you could not think Mr. T—d—y I would contradict you.”

6. Sl—gs—y. “ Huzza, boys, this is a rare job for me.”

7. The Devil. “ Though the foundation of my tower is sapp'd, I hope you Mr. Sl—gs—by will secure it from falling.”

8. Mr. W—d—r. “ Well B—th, I understand that part of the Castle is tumbling down, if so I shall have more labourers to pay all the winter. Let me have a fresh pipe and a pint upon the strength of it.”

9. Mr. B—gg's Ghost. “ This accident has roused me once more to appear at that delightful place called Windsor Castle. I have often told Mr. T—d—y that his fiery pitch, tow and tar temper would never make him a solid surveyor.”

10. Mr. B—n—d—r. “ Ah, Master Biggs, when we was together, we never did any thing without first consulting the board.”

11. Sir Wm. C—mb—rs. “ You boy you transacted this business without our advice, which is now too late for us to remedy, without rebuilding and putting the T—s in its former state.”

12. Mr. S—db—y. “ This is wonderful stupidity indeed.”

13. Mr. C—fe, Cl—k to the B—d. “ No wonder at all, Sir, when failors are appointed surveyors.”

14. All the Tradesmen. “ If a worse come in his place, it must be that gentleman upon the adjacent tower.”

15. Mr. W—lf—n. “ Come, my lads, all your healths. There is a winter's work cut out for you, and I'll promise you during the whole time my porter shall be good.”

16. All the labourers in and about the castle with one voice say, “ Out with him.”

17. Dr. M—g—y. “ Sir don't be dismayed; take a few of these drops in a glass of spring water, and they will revive your drooping spirits; and if you should demand satisfaction of the author of this publication, I'll be your second, as you was so obliging sometime ago to offer me your service in that capacity.”
